Water levels in the Great Lakes, including Lake Michigan, are above their historical averages for the first time since the late 1990s.

LAKE MICHIGAN RISING

By Tony Briscoe | CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Lake Michigan is on the rise.

Since hitting a record-low water level two years ago, the lake has been replenishing at an almost unprecedented rate, rising more than 3 feet since January 2013, according to government agencies.

Here's why

A number of factors contribute to fluctuations in lake levels, including air temperature, humidity and wind speeds.

The Great Lakes Basin has largely been rejuvenated thanks to rain-induced runoff and higher amounts of precipitation, which have continued in Chicago as the National Weather Service recorded more than 7 inches of precipitation in June—double the monthly normal. Lower temperatures also mitigated evaporation, in addition to ice cover from the past two winters affected by polar vortexes.

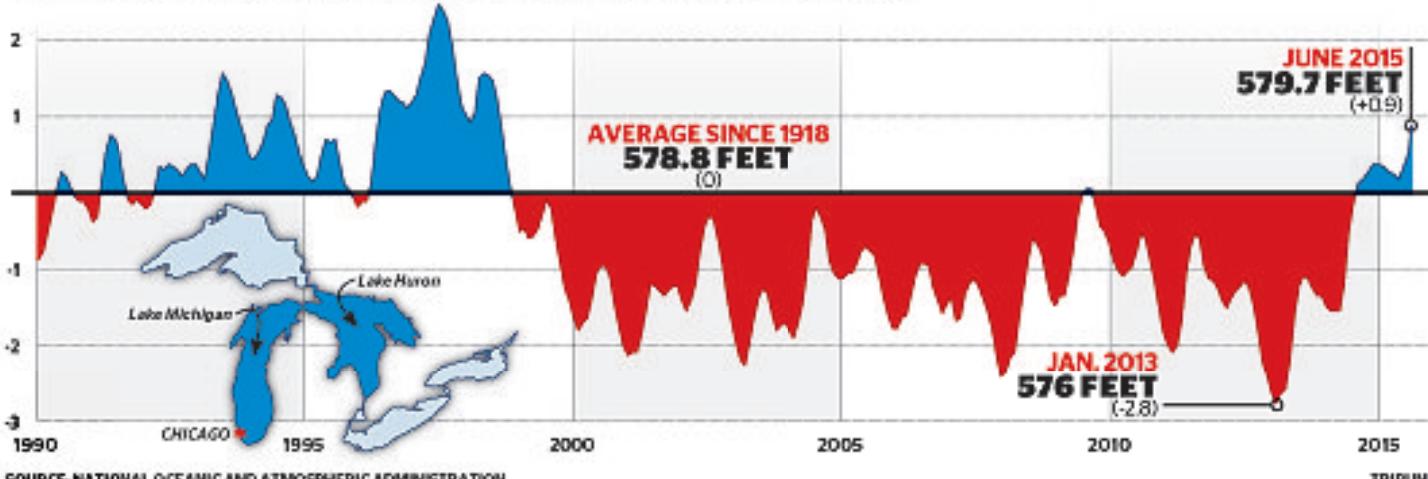

History lesson

The Great Lakes are the world's largest source of freshwater, and some of those lakes have experienced a decade-and-a-half of below-average levels. Lake Michigan lost 4 feet of water in the late 1990s, and its levels remained low for an unusually long period.

"It just stayed below average for 15 years, which was the longest persistent below-average [stretch] on record," said Drew Gronewold, hydrologist for the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. "People

AVERAGE LAKE MICHIGAN AND HURON LEVELS

Levels in Lake Michigan and Lake Huron have risen above their long-term average after setting a record low in 2013. The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration considers Huron and Michigan a single lake system and measures the water level as feet above or below an elevation benchmark referred to as the International Great Lakes Datum of 1985, which is used to compare levels of all of the Great Lakes.

were asking, 'Will the water levels ever go up again?'

For the first time since the late 1990s, the water levels of the Great Lakes rose above their historical averages late last year. Lakes Michigan and Huron, at their highest levels since 1998, experienced the second-largest gain over a 24-month span since the Army Corps of Engineers began keeping records in 1918. For measurement purposes, the two lakes are considered one body of water because they are linked by a strait.

Research suggests that the catalyst of the 15-year drought was a strong El Niño, an ocean current that brought about warmer waters and greater evaporation rates.

What it means

Experts say the swift, unexpected resurgence has provided relief to commercial shipping, recreational boaters and wildlife. However, the rising waters also have contributed to significant erosion that threatens local beaches and may damage other shoreline properties as forecasts anticipate this pattern to continue through summer.

Local beaches, including Kathy Osterman Beach, also known as Hollywood Beach, have been shrinking in the wake of Lake Michigan's re-emergence, according to Shelli Lulklin, who lives on the lakefront on Chicago's far North Side.

While this may disappoint beachgoers, the ebb and flow of the Great Lakes is beneficial to the ecosystem as far as wildlife is concerned, said Harvey Bootsma, associate professor at the University of Wisconsin at Milwaukee's School of Freshwater Sciences.

"To go through these cycles of drying and drownings, it's helpful to the wetlands," he said. "Rising lake levels create new wetlands that help spawning for certain species such as pike."

These days, I'm...

Listening to: I'm obsessed with Rhett and Link's "Ear Biscuits" podcast and recommend it to anyone who is curious about working in new media (specifically YouTube) and how those who are currently making a living from it got their starts in the medium.

Drinking: I have been on a barleywine kick, currently enjoying GnarlyWine from Lagunitas, my favorite brewery.

Reading: "William Shakespeare's The Phantom of Menace." One of the best mashups I've had the pleasure to read this year! If you're a fan of the Bard or the Force, you'll really enjoy it.

Checking out this app: YouTube Creator Studio is an amazing on-the-go app for content creators to stay involved in their online communities, as well as view the analytics of each of their videos. I receive push notifications, which allow me to quickly respond to comments and maintain viewer engagement.

Trying this new thing: I'm experimenting with more sketch comedy on my YouTube channel. The vlog format is great, but I come from an improv background and I've been wanting to explore that more, and hopefully my online audience will be receptive to it.

Obsessed with this social media platform: Snapchat. It's the most raw and unfiltered you can get, next to Vine. Snapchat is a place where you're able to be authentic and unedited, either as a brand or through a personal account. If you're someone who enjoys to draw, it also allows you to fully explore your creativity through intricate drawings. It's so much fun allowing my imagination to run wild, taking advantage of the capabilities of the mobile app platform.

Loving this gadget: My Samsung Galaxy Note 4. Without it, I wouldn't be able to create half of the Snapchat "snapsterpieces" that have graced our readers' mobile devices.

HOMICIDES SPIKE IN LOGAN SQUARE

'It seems like it's starting over again,' resident says

By Megan Crepeau | REDEYE

The Chicago neighborhood that has exploded with breweries, art galleries, coffee shops and condos is on track to nearly double its homicides this year.

Despite a dip in overall crime, seven killings were reported in the Logan Square community in the first half of 2015—as many as in Englewood, according to a RedEye analysis of preliminary police data. In all of 2014, just eight killings were reported in the Northwest Side community.

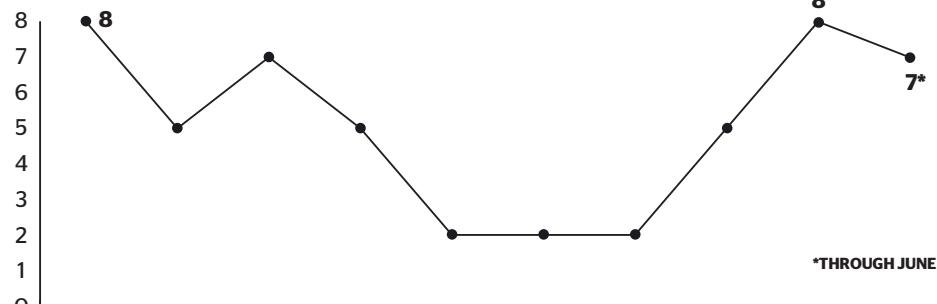

So far this year, Logan Square has seen more homicides than it did in 2010, 2011 and 2012 combined.

The spike comes amid a period of rapid change for the area, which is bordered by the Chicago River on the east, Diversey Avenue on the north, Metra tracks on the west and Bloomingdale Avenue on the south. It has seen some of the most significant gentrification in the city in recent years, experts say.

"We see these signs of gentrification, rising rents and home values, rising incomes, a

Logan Square homicides, 2006-2015

The Logan Square community has seen a spike in homicides so far this year, according to RedEye records. Here's how many killings occurred in Logan Square each year since 2006.

higher percentage of people working in management more than blue-collar jobs," said Lauren Nolan, an economic development planner with the Voorhees Center at UIC who studies neighborhood change. "They're really on their way to look like Wicker Park if these trends continue."

From 2000 to 2010, median family income in Logan Square jumped from $46,745 to $63,098, according to census data compiled by the Voorhees Center.

But just because the area sees a big demographic change doesn't mean old conflicts disappear, said Linnea Blomgren, who has lived in Logan Square for decades.

"I don't see an increase in crime against newcomers to the neighborhood," said Blomgren, 69, who is active in her neighborhood Chicago Area Policing Strategy program. "It seems like it's the same as it's been for years, where it's one gang disputing territory, and it could be because they feel they're losing their territory

... it's adding tension to situations that have been in existence for years and years."

Chicago Police Commander Marc Buslik, whose Shakespeare District includes most of Logan Square, warned against reading too much into the homicide numbers.

"You cannot look at a year or two, or sometimes even three years, to develop any kind of trend," he said. "Statistically, the numbers are so small that you cannot really say that there's anything going on."

Most of this year's homicides were isolated domestic-related or gang-related incidents, Buslik said. And despite some pockets of gang activity, Logan Square doesn't see the kind of drug trade or overarching turf wars that some other areas of the city do, he said.

"What we get here are these legacy gang conflicts that occasionally feed personal conflicts. Not that there's some kind of big gang war or all of a sudden one gang decides they want to take over the territory of another. That's not what happens," he said. "What happens is you get a member of one gang who finds himself or herself in another gang's territory, or somehow disrespects a member of the other gang, and they take to violence to resolve it."

Despite what people may think, it's fairly common for crime to increase when a neighborhood begins gentrifying, said Arthur Lurigio, a professor of psychology and criminal justice at Loyola University Chicago.

"We have the expectation that if neighborhoods gentrify, if it's really true gentrification, that crime would go down, but it doesn't," he said.

"Young men who are involved in ongoing violent conflict in the neighborhood might be feeling a little bit of an upheaval and uncertainty about their futures in the neighborhood, which could be increasing tension among them," Lurigio said. "There's going to be conflict because the borders of territories that have been historically controlled are changing ... [and there is] less likely territory to go around, that's also going to be a situation that can precipitate ongoing conflicts and make them worse."

Buslik said that that doesn't necessarily apply to his district, where gang boundaries have remained more or less stable over the past few years. And overall crime in Buslik's district is down, he said. From April 1 to July 1 of this year, 44 instances of violent crime were reported; that's down from 56 instances in the same time period last year, he said. Property crime was down as well, from 235 occurrences to 196.

The most recent Logan Square homicide occurred in late June, when a man was stabbed in the chest during a fight with his neighbor. In May, a 19-year-old was shot dead in a grocery store parking lot during a gang scuffle, authorities said; the month before, a 24-year-old man was killed near what is now the Bloomingdale Trail when someone allegedly got out of a vehicle, shot him and drove off.

The victim in that case was Mikal Johnson, an aspiring semi-pro football player.

"The family is still feeling devastated," said Johnson's grandmother, Tauheedah Mustafa. "Everybody misses him. Sometimes some of the children, even the smaller ones, all the way up to me, you'll see tears coming because they're thinking about Mikal."

Johnson wasn't a "gangbanger," his grandmother said, but rather a happy, humble and ambitious young man.

"We miss him a lot," she said. "We're pleased with him that he went after what he really wanted to do and it was positive before he left here, and I think that's a blessing."

The May homicide outside the grocery store happened just half a block from the home Blomgren has owned for 45 years, and it has her worried that local crime is on an upswing—though she noted that Logan Square was significantly more dangerous in the '80s and '90s, when shootings on her block happened weekly.

"I'm so tired of seeing kids, young people, killed for nothing. It's so pointless and it's been going on here for years ... it gets very discouraging because things will get better for a few

MAPPING LOGAN SQUARE'S 2015 HOMICIDES

In January through June of this year, seven people have been killed in six incidents in the neighborhood.

1. 2000 block of West Fullerton Avenue

Feb. 19

A 30-year-old man was killed when someone in a passing truck shot him in the head. Authorities said the incident may have been gang-related. No charges have been filed in connection to the incident, a police spokesman said.

2. 1600 block of West Webster Avenue

March 16

Two men, 34 and 41, were shot dead outside the Dolphin nightclub in Bucktown after a fight broke out inside. No charges have been filed, a police spokesman said.

3. 2700 block of West Bloomingdale Avenue

April 8

A 24-year-old man was shot in the armpit by someone who came out of a vehicle and fired, then left the scene. No charges have been filed, according to police.

4. 2500 block of West Moffat Street

April 15

A 58-year-old woman was found strangled in her home. A spokesman for the Cook County State's Attorney's office had no knowledge of charges filed in the incident.

5. 2900 block of West Armitage Avenue

May 13

A 19-year-old man was shot dead in the parking lot of a grocery store after what authorities characterized as a gang-related fight. His alleged killer has been charged with weapons offenses, but not murder, since authorities said the victim shot first.

6. 1900 block of North Rockwell Street

June 29

A 26-year-old man was fatally stabbed in the chest in a backyard, allegedly by a neighbor, who was arrested and charged with murder.

months and it seems like it picks up again," Blomgren said. "Somebody actually dying so close was really shocking. It seems like it's starting over again."

Homicides and shootings overall are up in Chicago this year compared with 2014; in the first six months of this year, 216 homicides were reported, compared with 189 for the same period last year. The Austin community saw 19 killings from January to June; more than any other community, according to RedEye data.

Douala Mitchell, 18, has lived in Logan Square for three or four years, he said. He likes the area, with its small businesses and relative diversity, but it's fractured and extremely territorial, he said—and that leads to violence.

"There's a lot of people who might feel like they own a certain part of the city when they need to realize that they don't," he said. And that applies to all kinds of in-groups, not just gangs, he said.

"No one owns anything. It's a community effort. When I sign a lease for a certain place, that doesn't mean it's my block, it's everyone's block," he said. "Everyone has input, not one organization, not one person."

Mitchell plans to stay in the neighborhood, he said, despite its flaws.

"If you're scared, stay in the house. I'm definitely staying. This is my way of showing people I can't scare," Mitchell said. "Our neighborhood, our houses, our block, our streets, our trees, our grass, this is ours, not one person, not one organization, this is ours and we all need to take effort in it."

Blomgren recalled a time in the late 1990s when gangs would shoot at each other right outside her front door.

"I perceive this, even though this is a setback, it's still much better than it used to be," she said. "I never did feel much sense of fear. You can't feel that way, otherwise you'd lock yourself in the house and never go out."

III. approves 1st workers to grow medical pot

PharmaCann LLC is preparing for a final inspection from state regulators Tuesday. Once that is secured, along with IDs for workers who have passed background checks, Illinois' fledgling medical marijuana industry will finally be able to get down to business—growing pot—nearly two years after a change in state law made it legal.

Since the state began issuing the worker IDs earlier this month, at least six cultivation centers have been approved to receive them, state Department of Agriculture spokeswoman Kristi Jones said via email. The cultivation houses must pass a department inspection before receiving written authorization to commence operations but should begin growing “very shortly,” Jones wrote. TRIBUNE

Brian Urlacher at the Nike Store on Michigan Avenue

FOX'S NEW FRIEND

URLACHER LIKES BEARS COACH'S STYLE—AND HOW HE CAN HELP CUTLER

By Matt Lindner | FOR REDEYE

There might be no bigger fan of the Bears' moves this offseason than their best linebacker of the past generation.

"I'm a big fan of Coach [John] Fox," Brian Urlacher said.

The future Hall of Famer said he met with Fox about three weeks ago at Halas Hall, where he also was able to catch up with former teammates.

"I've liked him since he was in Carolina," Urlacher said. "I like his style of football. They run the football, and they play good defense."

Urlacher spoke exclusively with RedEye before making a surprise appearance Saturday afternoon at the Nike Store on Michigan Avenue, where he talked football with young athletes. He said that growing up in Lovington, N.M., he didn't get to see his own athlete role models very often.

"I loved playing high school football and I didn't have the opportunity to meet an athlete when I was in high school, so it's cool to get a chance to meet [younger football players] and hang out with them," he said.

In person, Urlacher still appears to be the same physical specimen that led the Bears to the Super Bowl eight years ago. Does he miss the game that made him a Chicago legend?

"No, I don't miss playing," he said. "I miss being around the guys. That's really about it. When you're as sore as I am, when your back's as stiff as I am when you wake up, it's hard to miss it. It's tough, man."

These days, his is a life of leisure.

"I played golf this morning, I played golf yesterday, last weekend I went fishing," he said. "Just chasing my kids around, golfing and fishing."

Urlacher has gone from linebacker to line breaker. That's actually the name of his fishing boat, Linebreaker, wrapped in Bears blue and orange and based in Marco Island, Fla. Urlacher's Twitter feed is full of images from his adventures, with colorful red snapper and black grouper among his catches.

"When the kids have breaks, we try and get down there," he said. "They all like to fish, so that works out good for me."

So what's harder, catching a quarterback or a big fish?

"Who's the quarterback," he replied, laughing. "Fishing's tough, man. Lot of technique involved with fishing. I feel like our captain puts us on the fish. It's pretty simple. Just gotta get them in the boat. The bigger they are, the harder they are to catch."

Heading into the 2015 season, Urlacher sees the Bears returning to the old-school style that relies on the running game and defense.

"I think running the football takes pressure off of everybody on offense; the short passing game and handing the ball off to Matt [Forte] is only going to help everybody on offense," he said. "Their defense will be better because [Fox] knows how to play defense."

Yet ask him whether he thinks Jay Cutler will be better this season and you'll get a wry smirk and a curt response.

"The running game helps everybody," Urlacher said.

MLB Home Run Derby | 7 p.m. ESPN

There's a new bracket format this year, and the Cubs have not one but two chances to win. In fact, Anthony Rizzo and Kris Bryant have a chance to meet in the finals. Which might ease the sting of losing the series to the White Sox. Or not.

1	Patrick Sharp is a Dallas Star now. Try to console all his Chicago fans.	Don't worry. He went to live on a farm with a family that will love and care for him.	At least we still have Johnny Oduya. Or do we?	Niklas Hjalmarsson scores some pretty handsome goals, too?	Well, you still have Corey Crawford and his neck beard. #NeckBeardsAreCuddly	Welcome to the world of professional sports, where you are simply a number and teams could care less about you.
2	Serena Williams' Grand Slam dominance: Boring or captivating?	Was Michael Jordan boring? The Blackhawks' three Stanley Cups in six years? Come on, guys.	It only gets boring after the 22nd time.	BORING?! I REFUSE TO EVEN ANSWER THIS QUESTION!	Zzzzz. We were all so captivated by Wimbledon this year. Is it over yet? Azzzzzz	Nothing compares to Serena. Nothing.
3	How much will you miss all the grunting at Wimbledon?	The grunting was tolerable. The grousing about Serena Williams was not.	Not as much as I'll miss seeing a well-dressed David Beckham sitting in the royal box.	Uhh nnnhh. (Translation: Not much.)	As much as I miss Ricky Renteria. #RememberHim	As much as I miss my last girlfriend, who grunted when she took any bite of food.
4	Where has the White Sox's spectacular defense been until recently?	Same place it's gonna go back to once the Cubs series is over.	Wrigley Field, apparently.	Hiding in Jeff Samardzija's goatee.	Cork & Kerry at the Park, 33rd and Princeton. #Beer	It makes me laugh that someone wasted time asking me about the effing White Sox.
5	If Anthony Rizzo or Kris Bryant wins the Home Run Derby on Monday Soxman takes me out for tacos in the Soxmobile on Tuesday. A bet is a bet.	... then it will erase the memory of losing the crosstown series to the Sox. Or something.	... Cubs fans will be insufferable about whether their swings are ruined forever.	... they'll get a nice cupcake with a "C" on it. #WhoCares	... Chicago will continue to pretend like the rest of the country cares about the Cubs whatsoever.

horoscopes

TAROT.COM

Cancer June 22-July 22

You might feel put off by your sweetheart's reaction to a gift you give. Your sweetheart might show a lack of appreciation in another way, such as expecting you to pay the tab every time you go out. Perhaps it's time for a talk.

Leo July 23-Aug. 22

You might try so hard to make one of your relatives see just how special the love of your life is, only to be sorely disappointed. Don't let it ruin the good thing you've got going.

Virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22

A decision between you and your partner, or a conversation that you have Tuesday, might leave you feeling less than satisfied. Do your best to move past the nagging self-doubt.

Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23

You and your sweetie might have a major disagreement about your social agenda and how much money you're spending on parties and other outings with friends. An honest talk about this will be in order.

Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 21

Romance may take a backseat Tuesday as you're likely to nurse a few wounds inflicted by your boss. It's possible that you'll receive a less-than-stellar performance review or simply feel less appreciated than usual.

Sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21

A fresh start is possible this week between you and your partner when it comes to finances. The urge for control will be felt between both of you, and the only way you'll overcome it is to remember that you're on the same side.

Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19

Exciting developments in your love life are possible. But before you and your love can reach a new phase of happy, you'll have to hash out a few things. The arguments might be ugly at times, but keep your eye on the prize.

Aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18

Things between you and your love might have seemed so perfect that you've been certain nothing can rattle your relationship. This week, you might learn everything isn't what you thought it was when it comes to love and money.

Pisces Feb. 19-March 20

If you're dating someone new, it's possible that your love life is about to get messy. If you're in a solid union, it's likely that after Saturday you two will need some relationship rehab.

Aries March 21-April 19

On Tuesday, you and your lover may have different ideas of what constitutes sexual pleasure. Expecting each other to know what buttons to push isn't realistic. Have a conversation.

Taurus April 20-May 20

If you've been single, on Saturday your luck may change. It'll be "close but no cigar" when it comes to Mr. or Ms. Right. Don't lose hope. Very soon your time will arrive.

Gemini May 21-June 21

You and your sweetie might experience some trouble in paradise. On Tuesday, a conversation about division of labor might take an ugly turn. By becoming aware of the situation you'll be able to rectify it together.

TODAY IN THE YEAR ...

1942: Actor Harrison Ford was born in Chicago.
1985: Before undergoing surgery for colon cancer, President Ronald Reagan transferred power temporarily to Vice President George H.W. Bush; it was the first time the Constitution's presidential disability clause was invoked.
1995: Chicago's high temperature for the day reached 106 degrees, breaking a 61-year-old record and beginning the second-hottest summer in city history. (When the heat wave ended four days later, 521 Cook County deaths were blamed on the weather.)

THE QUOTE

I watched 'Star Wars' with my parents too. It meant as much to me as it means to you. Because we love it and care about it so much, our job is to not be blinded by that. Being a fan is not enough."

—J.J. Abrams, to fans at the Comic-Con panel for "Star Wars: The Force Awakens," about how he was careful not to let his fandom get in the way of his job, according to time.com.

Chimi-[bleep]ing-changas

After years of being stalled, it looks like "Deadpool" has found its hero in Ryan Reynolds. The movie's debut trailer received standing ovations at San Diego's Comic-Con on Saturday, according to variety.com. "For one I think it's an absolute miracle that a studio let us make 'Deadpool,' let alone a rated-R 'Deadpool,'" Reynolds said. The trailer is set to debut online this week, according to variety.com. Also of note: Reynolds greeted fans with a "Looks like we're ready to make some chimi-[bleep]ing-changas in here." Yeah, Deadpool!

Get that guy some aloe vera

Bryan Cranston never fails to disappoint. The "Breaking Bad" actor was on Nerd HQ's Conversations for a Cause panel when a fan—from Albuquerque, N.M.—asked Cranston if he liked his time in the city while filming the show. His reply? "I'd go and visit your mother once in a while." BURRRNNNN. Cranston dropped the mic after that, according to ew.com. Is there anything Cranston can't do?
